Part 2 – Research Input

The research team is pursuing a design thinking approach to frame a potential vision for meeting the library, learning, and information needs of the future. Design thinking includes developing empathy - we seek to gain insights into the life and context of your neighborhoods and the specific library, learning and information needs of community members.

With this in mind, please answer the following questions that will help steer the research team in the right direction. Any and all recommendations are welcome for the following topics:

Additional Stakeholders Who in your community is a potential stakeholder that should be included in the planning process? For interviews or future Advisory Committee meetings?

Research Topics Are there aspects of your community's context (geography, culture, economy) relevant to library, learning, or information needs worth taking into consideration?

Community Life Are there events or places researchers should visit or engage to further develop understanding of needs?

Interview Questions Can you think of a unique question that would spark a conversation amongst your neighbors and friends, concerning their library, learning, and information needs?

Your Ideas Anything else you think may be helpful in the empathetic research endeavor?

Part 3 – Open
